FULL REPORT AND ANALYSIS OF HABICAT'S WEBCOMIC

TEYA FYSDDEL

Abstract

The webcomic published by the user Habicat was analysed in depth in order to make predictions of future panels, and to classify its narrative structure.

Context

The webcomic produced by the Fruity Rumpus forum user habicatAni (@habicat0) was first published on the board “MSPFA” within “FRAF Works” on October 13, 2026 C.E. From then on in, it has amassed eight pages of replies, eight favourites on MSPFA, and two full-length audio-included animations. After the second animation was released - “[S] Quinn: Reunite with loving wife you just met.” - the author of this report began to make the following report as a way to analyse the entirety of the story, after making a short analysis of a single frame of the animation.

Introduction

This report will take the following form.
Firstly, each panel will be analysed individually.
Then, links will be made between the panels.
Finally, predictions will be made.

Part 1: Individual Analysis

Title

Let us notice the title of this webcomic. Note that, in the FRAF release, the webcomic is known as “Habicat: Forumventure of Bullshittery”. However, the MSPFA release names it as “Habicat’s Absolute Bullshittery”. What is the significance of the difference here? Well, the title reflects the nature of the medium in which the comic has been published. The forum’s adventure is entitled “Forumventure”, whereas the MSPFA’s adventure is entitled “Absolute”.

Note the genitive nature of the medium - “Forumventure of Bullshittery” - whereas, as an absolute, it is an objective nature. However, the genitive term in the MSPFA release is attached to Habicat. What is the significance of this? The implication here is that Forumventure is more important than Habicat. If Habicat was of a higher importance than the Forum, then it would be entitled “Habicat’s Forumventure of Bullshittery”, however, it is “Habicat: Forumventure of Bullshittery”. Even though the genitive is attached to Bullshittery in the first case, but not in the second case, the only difference is the usage of “Forumventure” vs. “Absolute” to describe the “Bullshittery”, and so Forumventure has more importance than Habicat to be granted the supreme genitive form.

Consider also the usage of the colon within the first case. The FRAF release uses a colon, namely, the unicode of U+003A, to separate the possession of the author of the IP from the description of the IP itself. This is distinct from U+2236, the ratio unicode, as it is not a mathematical divisor. In fact, this U+003A colon is a hidden, or, implied genitive - in other words, it could be replaced with “Habicat’s Bullshittery’s Forumventure”. Note, again - Habicat still has a genitive form, but it is not in the same contracted form.